Wildlands Studies

An academic partner of Huxley College of the Environment, Wildlands Studies offers the rare opportunity to study critical environmental and wildlife concerns on six continents and sixteen different countries. Nomadic by design, our field based courses evolve annually to match the latest ecological research of the region. Academically rigorous, each outdoor study program earns 5-15 WWU credits, features direct contact and instruction with PhD. credentialed faculty who are subject matter experts, contributes directly to your cumulative GPA, and WWU financial aid will apply. Students come from all over North America and Canada to form small teams of 8-16, perfect for sharing energy, responsibilities, and discoveries. The overarching goal is for students to leave our programs with extensive knowledge about a specific region and the broader skills of ecological, geological, and social sciences needed to effectively pursue their future careers. Join us in Nepal, India, Thailand, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, Cuba, Belize, New Zealand, Australia, the Pacific Islands, South Africa, Alaska, Montana, and California!
